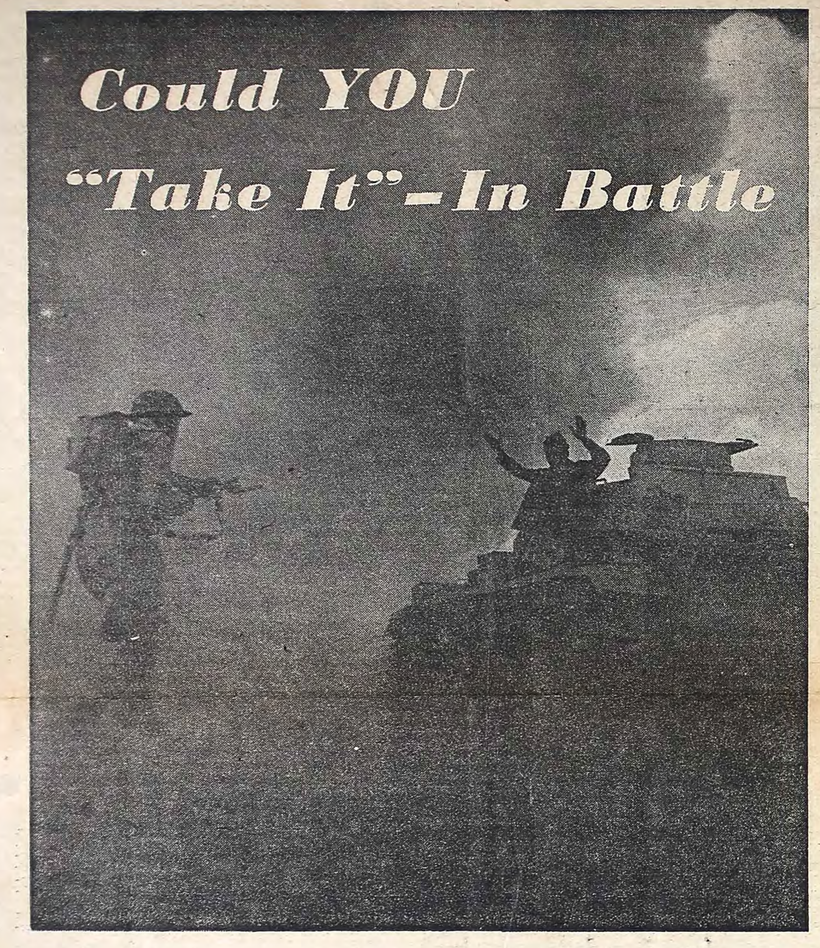
Could YOU "Take It"—In Battle



By A. W. O'BRIEN
Standard War Correspondent

LONDON.

HAVE you ever sat back and wondered how YOU would react in face of the terrifying inferno that is modern warfare? Granting that long and severe training would give you the necessary physical stamina, would your mental machinery and natural supply of courage be equal to the grim test of shrapnel, dive bombers and whining bullets?

Judging by the frank statements made to me in a hospital on the outskirts of London by ten representative Canadians who had just returned to England after being wounded in the Sicilian battles, the odds are almost 100 per cent in favor of you standing up to anything without any obvious decline of intestinal fortitude. Boiled down, the self-analysis of these ten—former city and farm workers—eliminate "cowardice" because cowards are really almost non-existent. Practically everybody does "get the wind up" at times but that universal weakness doesn't affect the men's eagerness or fighting ability for three main reasons:

(a) Discipline born of years of strenuous training makes men do the right thing in the right way much as a smooth automobile engine replies to gear shifts and accelerator;

(b) The immense excitement of battle combined with every man's busy concentration on his particular job;

(c) Being in the company of other men provides a stimulus not only directly but indirectly—the fear of displaying fear.

How They Felt

HERE are the actual statements of ten Canadian wounded soldiers who had their World War II baptism of fire in Sicily:

Lance Sergeant George Abbott of 734 Godin Avenue, Verdun, declared that after the long training of years "going into action seemed not abnormal but normal. I can honestly state I felt no real fear at any stage although I was under fire several times doing recce work before I got it." Abbott was tommy gunned in the leg and arm near Agira. The spirit of confidence was evident in his describing the Canadians marching 30 miles some days and then fighting; how the Huns were obviously leery of the "Red Patches" (identification arm patches of Canadian First Division) and revealed themselves pathetically "yellow" when it came to close-range scraps.

Corporal Clement Aspireault from Chandler, Que., picked up some shrapnel in the knee at 3.45 a.m. on July 18 upon his first contact with Jerry. He was with a section of ten men who ran into a mess of machine guns and four-inch mortar fire—four were killed and six wounded. "But at no time was I scared," he told me. "My every energy seemed to switch automatically into trying to get our gun out of trouble—afterwards I figured there was every reason why I should have been frightened stiff but I didn't even get the urge to run for protection . . . and I'm no hero guy, believe me." He was with the Royal 22nd Regiment, immortal "Vant-Doos" of the last war.

Sergeant Fred Bartropp of Lachine, Que., had the benefit of Great War experience but nothing could ever prepare a man adequately for the nightmare test he faced on July 30 at the foot of Mount Etna when, as a member of a mine detonator party, he found himself under mortar fire. There was no use lying down because they were in the middle of a mine field and, without rest or food, they plodded away in that same mine field under fire from four in the morning until seven at night by which time 88's had joined the barrage. "It sounds boastful, I suppose," he said, "but while we had the wind up now and again, we really plugged away as if it was merely a training exercise. At no time did fear actually seize us."

Private Alan MacRae stopped a tommy gun bullet in his right shoulder three days after Catanova but that was on August 2—he had seen action since July 10. Coming from Truro, N.S., where he had done general laboring work, he declares that instead of fear "I felt a wonderful thrill at getting into the real thing and would really like to get back into it as soon as I'm better."

Training Harder

PRIVATE HARLAN ROSS of Elmsdale, N.S., was a farmer. Often before collecting shrapnel in a shoulder near Catanova, he had wondered how he would react under fire. "The first time scared me but not so much as you'd notice it. After that, I found myself surprised at how much easier the actual campaigning was than training."

Sergeant Aubrey St. C. Rodenhiser, from Ridgewater, N.S., got an 88 fragment in his heel near Lienforte "but it was worth the wound because I killed two Germans for sure." He found the fighting not half as tough as getting to the fighting. There was nervousness, yes, but only the type that athletes feel before the big game—in fact, "I'd sell my soul to get back with the boys," he said.

Private Robert Clark of Fredericton, N.B., was in a party of six on July 18 when a well hidden Nazi machine gun burst on them—two were killed and two wounded, Clark getting a bullet in the ankle. He classed the Sicilian show as "terrifically exciting and not at all frightening because you've had it before you realize there is something to be afraid of."

Private Chester Helgason was a United Cigar Store clerk in Winnipeg before becoming a regimental stretcher bearer with the Princess Pats. It's hard, one-sided work up there in the front lines without a gun. Near Mount Etna he was attending to a wounded man when an 88 mm. shell burst behind him and he was wounded in the leg, shoulder and neck, but credits the saving of his life after eight blood transfusions to a Major Robertson of Montreal. "You get accustomed to anything," he said, "and after the first couple of experiences under fire I actually went about my work as if nothing was happening. Only things that shook me were the poor soldier in the night on a bullet swept ridge who was yelling for somebody to shoot him—he was badly hit and we couldn't get to him in time. Again, there was a German who was half lying on the ground looking at the stumps of both his legs. When we tried to do something for him he simply waved us on—obviously preferring to die. Another time while working on some of our injured men, a German detached himself from some prisoners and showed me a card in German on the edge of which was a red cross. I nodded and he went to work beside me. All that breeds mighty impulses and they seem to oust any fear—you have only one urge, to do your job."

Private Keith Davis, another stretcher bearer with the Hastings and Prince Edward Regiment, received some shrapnel in the knee before Catania. For one complete day his area was under steady bombardment yet he failed to "get the wind up." He said: "Seeing wounded men who need your help just naturally makes you forget everything else—if I had nothing to do I would certainly have been afraid. We all had immense confidence through the knowledge that General Montgomery had shown he liked the Canadians and was giving them good jobs to do. There was nothing that really bothered me in Sicily except burying the dead."

Lance Corporal Vic Archambault of Point St. Charles, didn't get as far as Sicily—his tank landing craft was torpedoed in the Mediterranean en route and he suffered a broken vertebra in the back. "You have no time to get scared," he smiled, "usually things happen so fast that your only thought is getting out of trouble. I was down below deck when the torpedo hit and the fellow I was talking to was killed. I must have been K.O.'ed for the moment because when I came to there was fire raging all around. I pulled myself up the red hot stairs burning myself severely and found when on deck that my life jacket was burned off—so I had to swim for it, about 100 yards to the nearest raft. Two brothers from Montreal had to help me on it—that was when I first noticed something was wrong with my back." Yet, in common parlance, Archembault had a broken back—it took courage to carry on but he admits it was strictly the urge for self-preservation that made him do it.

So, to the broad aspect of personal courage in battle is added another dimension—that feeling of safety until one is actually in sight of the enemy . . . and that happens rarely in modern mechanized warfare. Only one man of the ten actually killed an enemy. Another one fired his rifle at Germans "somewhere behind some trees." If shells or bombs drop they aren't nearly as frightening as people in peaceful Canada imagine—either they hit you or they don't; if they hit you that's that and you know little about it for a while at least, and if they miss you you feel curious exhilaration at escaping while the enemy remains remote. And when you finally get within sight of the enemy there is a mighty, thrilling sensation born of long training designed to just that end—it's "real hunting" at last!

Civilian Reaction

IN the case of civilians, who lack the intensive training of soldiers, the stimulus of being in company with others and the consequent fear of displaying fear operates strongly.

With in a period of five nights during last month in London there were five air raid alarms. It was noticeable that during two of those occasions when I was alone in my flat there was a sensation of uneasiness that didn't exist when in the company of others. On the night of October 7, when two bomber waves hit London I was sitting in a theatre on Leicester Square with Cliff Sifton of the Winnipeg Free Press and a notice flashed on the screen: "The alert has just sounded. Those wishing to do so should leave now. The show will continue." It was a rattling good movie and we remained in our seats until the vibration of heavy anti-aircraft gun fire made it obvious that something big was cooking outside. So we went outside for a look.

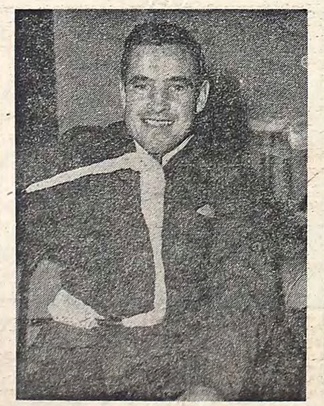
From a street corner on Leicester Square we watched the sky drama as Dorniers and Heinkels with swift F.W. 190 fighter bombers roared through blotches of flak puffs. The barrage was deafening and although high explosive bombs could be heard falling at a distance and flak-fragments tinkled on the streets, people around us were cheering gleefully at the spectacle of a Nazi caught in the searchlight beams and surrounded by bursting shells—personal fear was gone. We stopped a passerby in the blackout and asked if he knew where the "big one" had hit a while previously. It was later revealed that the bomb had snuffed out four houses in a residential district but the passerby insisted on explaining how much worse it had been during the "blitz". A second dim figure chipped in with comments about his experiences in East Anglia.

We walked away leaving them both talking at once—men together help one another through tight spots by sheer talking.

Whatever way YOU may think you would react in a raid, I am convinced that the reactions I have described are common to the vast majority of "civilian outlook" folk. The natural tendency is not to run for it but rather to rush to the aid of somebody in trouble. There is also a curious sensation of immunity — "your" bomb has dropped and missed —lightning never hits twice in the same spot psychology.

Ten Canadians wounded in action tell how they felt and reacted when they came under the enemy's fire.

Pte. Robert Clark, of Fredericton, N.B., wounded with the Carleton and York Regiment in Sicily.



Pte. Harlan Ross, of Elmsdale, N.S., who was wounded in Sicily while serving with the West Nova Scotians.

Lance Sgt. George Abbott, of Verdun, Que., wounded in Sicily while in action with Royal Canadian Engineers.

Sgt. Aubrey St. C. Rodenhiser, of Ridgewater, N.S., wounded with the West Nova Scotians in Sicily.

Pte. Alan MacRae, of Truro, N.S., who was wounded in action in Sicily with the West Nova Scotia regiment.

Sgt. Fred Bartropp, of Lachine, Que., wounded with 4th Field Co., R.C.E., while serving in Sicily campaign.

Pte. Chester Helgason, of Winnipeg, who was wounded while with the Princess Pats Regiment in Sicily.

Dear Sir:- Re:- D. 16147 - BARTROPP, Robert, F. (Dec'd.,) 555 Ville-Marie, Maisonneuve, Montreal (4), Que,.

The widow of the above named has requested us to submit the enclosed M.F.M. 441, and form of application for Dependents, Deceased Personnel, regarding payment of War Service Gratuity.

She informs us that the man died while receiving treatment, over the authority of the Department of Veterans Affairs, at the Royal Victoria Hospital, Montreal, Quebec, on November 13th., 1945.

Would you be kind enough to inform us whether the Gratuity can be paid to the widow.

Considering that the man died while a Ward of the Department of Veterans Affairs, it is assumed you will not require the production of a Death Certificate, as all particulars pertaining thereto, will we understand, be found on his official documents.

Thanking you in anticipation of your reply, we remain,

Yours very truly,

T. L. Leigh,
Manager.

Dear Sir

Enclosed is the will which I received on January 20 last.

According to your letter you are under the impression that this will was made up by my son. But as it was made by my husband and I have no other means of support I would greatly appreciate it if you could settle this matter as soon as possible. Yours truly

Mrs Bartoff

RE:- D-16147 - Fred Bartropp (dec.)

Dear Sir :-

I understand that this man died during November, 1945 and that his gratuity had been turned over to the Estates Branch.

I would request that an early decision be made by your department, in order that funds accruing to the estate may be made available to the widow and children. This would avoid the family from suffering any undue hardship at the present time.

Trusting that you will give this your earliest attention,

Iam,

Yours very truly,

Dear Sir

In reference to your letter concerning my Husband Im not asking his name to appear on your casulty list but after seeing it in our Montreal papers twice I dont think Im far wrong you tell me to address my mail the some as we always done would it be right after I have been sending them to the No 10 Canadian General Hospital England since he come back from the Hospital in North Africa Im sorry if I caused you any bothe

but he was wounded in July & it is now November I had come to believe that the next of Kin was notified & I have never been inclosed is all the only notification
I have had outside my Husband who was woundid in the right arm & coudnt write to me for a while but thanks to the Red Cross who used to write for him
hopeing this caused no uneasines

Im yours Truly
